

Burgess Hill School for Girls has proven to be a superb private educational institution. We are from America on a 2 year assignment. In 5 months, my 2 girls, ages 9 and 7 have been given the opportunity and have excelled in many "new" subject areas. They are currently involved in fine arts, team sports, world history, drama and instrumental music. These subjects are not offered at their elementary school in the states for another few years.

Our relocation specialist highly recommended the International Schools and strongly advised us not to seek the British educational system due to the incompatibility and complexity of the system. They stated the British educational system was extremely difficult to understand and the educational subjects would not be compatible to the States upon our return. In the end, this could cause future problems with placing the children at the correct elementary levels. After visiting 3 good international schools, I still needed to see for myself what the British private school system had to offer.

I made arrangements to visit 5 private schools but after my interview with the Junior School Head Mistress, Ms. Fulleylove, I was done. This was the school for us! Ms. Fulleylove thoroughly examined and researched what education the girls had received in the states and made sure the girls were properly fitted to the correct year group. She ensured the girls were well introduced and sought students to look after them as well. The girls transitioned seamlessly. To this day, I hear compliments from the teachers and the parents on how well the girls have settled in.

I am very fond of the staff's personal philosophy to ensure the girls are well rounded in all levels besides education. The staff believes the girls will gain self-confidence, self-worth, leadership and team skills that will remain with them throughout their adult lives. The girls shall strive in any future experiences they might encounter.

This school is highly academic with the national results to prove it. But there is more than education and test scores here. The school strives to achieve the highest level of commitment to the students and the parents so in the end, everyone including the teachers benefit.
